DEPLOYMENT READINESS EDUCATION FOR SERVICEWOMEN APP

SOLUTION DELIVERY DIVISION

The Deployment Readiness Education for servicewomen (DRES) application (app) provides essential information specifically for women before, during and after a deployment. These resources cover a variety of topics including pre-deployment packing lists, contraception advice, menstrual cycle and mental health management while on deployment, women's health care guidance, and suggestions for important communication with family before departure.

This app helps address education gaps identified by the Navy Bureau of Medicine in how women were prepared for deployment. They found that only 39% of servicewomen received contraceptive counseling prior to deployment while a majority of servicewomen did not have information on contraception options. Additionally, only 7% of women practiced menstrual suppression when 86% of servicewomen reported a desire to suppress or regulate menstruation. They also found that 13% of military women deployed to an area of combat operations, lost duty days for menstrual related issues. DRES helps provide the resources necessary to fill the gaps in this training.

DRES was developed by the Solution Delivery Division (SDD, J-6) Web & Mobile Technology Program Management Office in collaboration with the Navy Bureau of Medicine Office of Women's Health.

You can access the DRES app at mobile.health.mil/dres/
