What Providers Need to Know about Confidentiality and Mental Health

Standards of Confidentiality

Healthcare providers are prohibited from sharing protected mental health information unless it is authorized by the service member, authorized due to limits of confidentiality, mandated by policy, or required by court order.

Who has access to Protected Health Information?

- Chain of command (within limits of confidentiality)
- Health care team (i.e., nurses, dentists, medical assistants, behavioral health technicians, behavioral health providers, and front desk staff)

3 Tips for Maintaining Confidentiality

1. Consultation
   - Consult your professional code of ethics for important privacy guidelines
   - Consult with another health care provider to ensure service member’s safety if uncertain whether command notification is warranted

2. Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA)
   - Follow HIPAA guidelines in accordance with federal law and DOD issuances

3. Maintain Limitations to Confidentiality
   - Mandatory reporting is required for the following: harm to self, harm to others, harm to mission, special personnel assignments, inpatient care, acute medical conditions interfering with duty, problematic substance use treatment program, command-directed mental health evaluations, and other special circumstances such as disclosure of sexual assault or family violence
   - Ensure limits of confidentiality are clearly described on clinic intake documents so patient is fully informed prior to them sharing information with the provider.
   - Review limits of confidentiality with service member before initiating treatment to ensure they understand the limitations and they provide informed consent for treatment.
   - Prior to disclosing patient’s health information, carefully consider the limits to confidentiality.

A Suicide Prevention Tip

Creating a safety plan in the absence of serious risk of harm to self or others can be beneficial in reducing suicide risk for any service member enrolled in mental health care and does not warrant a command notification.
